The Holi Festival

The Holi Festival takes place every year in South Asia. It's especially popular in India. The celebration is at the end of winter. It's on the last full moon of the month. It is usually in late February or early March. The Holi Festival is the festival of spring.

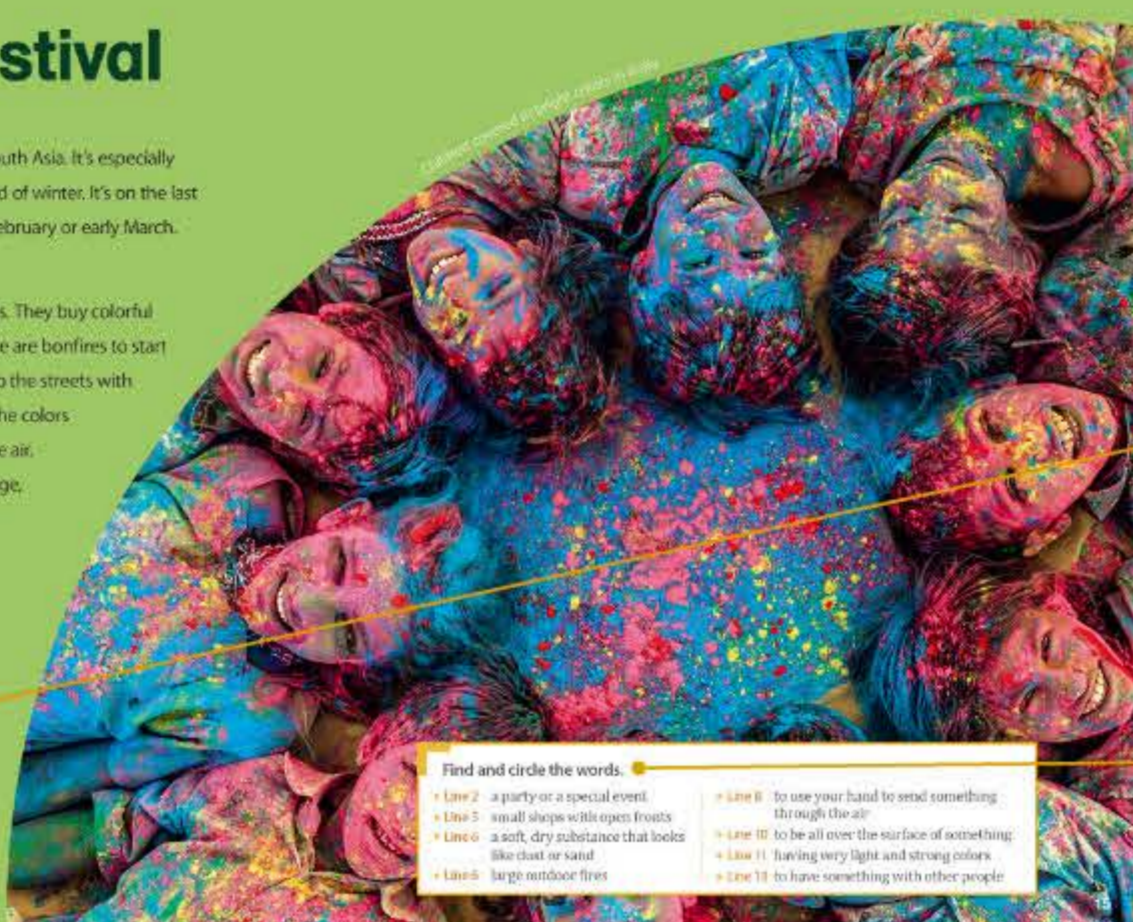

Before the festival, people go to market stalls. They buy colorful powder and paint. On the first evening, there are bonfires to start the celebration. The next day, people go into the streets with the colorful powder and paint. They throw the colors onto other people. They throw them into the air.

People are covered in pink, yellow, red, orange, and other bright colors! They sing, dance, and play together. They share food and drinks. Everybody laughs. Everybody is happy! The Holi Festival is an exciting, colorful way to start spring.
